

Search

Sunday, 7th August 2011

4* Luxury Hotel
Dinner Deals
for 2 Nights

from £69.50 pp

Ayrshire golf resort

adopts iPad for wine list

Francesca Capaldi pours a customer a glass of red in the Ailsa Bar at Turnberry as he peruses an iPad containing the hotel wine list's sommelier selections. Photograph: Robert Perry

« Previous

« Previous

Next »

Next »

ADVERTISEMENT

Published Date: 24 July 2011

By Jane Bradley

I still want my waiting staff to establish a relationship with the customer."

Earlier this year, Gordon Ramsay's Maze restaurant in London became the first in the UK to have an iPad menu.

"I think it is a very innovative idea and has a lot of potential," said Iain Herbert, chief executive of the Scottish Tourism Forum. "A lot of restaurants are now very interested in what we call Scotland's larder - and an iPad menu could give the opportunity to give further details on where food comes from and how it is produced.

"While the iPads are expensive, if this proves that it makes a difference in terms of selling in bars and restaurants, I could see quite a lot of places taking it on."

« Previous Page

Page 2 of 2

• Last Updated: 23 July 2011 7:35 PM